CHALLENGES

“ Aside from her compulsion to solve crimes, Cody has some personal issues to settle . . .

She's still coming to terms with her parents' divorce, and although she loves her mother dearly, Cody's inwardly angry that she insisted on her independence which caused family disruption.

Cody's just completed her freshman year at Loyola where she's studying forensics, but now questions her choice as the employment prospects are more limited than originally she thought.

College boyfriend, Adam, has become too possessive, and while they've agreed on time apart, she hasn't been able to break it off completely and isn't clear exactly why. . .

CHALLENGES

Cody's high school sweetheart, Zac, is keen for them to get back together over the summer, and although Cody's still attracted to him, she knows a long distance relationship isn't likely to work for either of them.

Meanwhile, Cody discovers dead bodies far more often than the rest of us and is always compelled to catch the killer despite a litany of obstacles.

In the first book, "Peril in the Pines", the death of a young family friend hits way too close to home. In book two, "Slip Stitch Slaying", the unfortunate victim is discovered in her grandmother's B&B. And the third victim is found at the riding stables close to the B&B in the next book, which is as yet unnamed. Watch this space ...
